The scene on my bike commute up University Avenue at about 9 this morning. Says it all really. #ProtectedBikeLanes matter @GoBikeGlasgow

Here was two weeks ago. It's almost like there's a pattern...! Just shows the lack of consideration given to cycle infra that paint is even considered an option here. Anyone who uses the road regularly knows the current situation is a joke for cycling.

5 cars parked across the painted lane yesterday, 4 of them idling. Just loved sucking down a lungful of that at the crest of the hill

Not only are the painted lanes on University Avenue only on one side of the road (the uphill section), but they are NOT safe protected space for cycling. In their redevelopment plans the @UofGlasgow plan to keep these lanes just as they are. @UofGsustain #paintisnotprotection

Vans galore on university avenue today, blocking the cycle lane and making the pavement impossible to use for wheelchairs or buggies.

And another one this morning. This is a systemic issue and the current proposals for university avenue will **not** solve it. The solution is safe cycle infrastructure ie. segregated lanes

Didn't get a photo but at lunchtime today there three taxis/cars in exactly the same place at university gardens. At what point does this become an issue with road design? #paintisnotprotection

This afternoon there were two taxis on one side of the hill and a truck on the other. The university claims painted lanes will be safe for cycling when the road is redeveloped. Yet that doesn't even work right now. They are failing the city miserably. #paintisnotprotection

Large lorry on university avenue cycle lanes this morning. As I took a photo a second pulled in behind me. Over the hill was a tour bus with a guide giving commentary, then finally another lorry at the bottom of the hill.

Forgot to post these. First two are the same day iirc. The lorry next to the junction with Gibson Street is a regular.
